I own land in Roseau county through which the proposed Great Northern power transmission project will go. I see no value from this project to the landowners In this area. In fact, land values should be negatively affected by power lines cutting through farmland. The land in the right of way of The Great Northern project will forever be out of service. Farming practices must be altered to allow for building and maintenance of the lines not to mention operating farm equipment safely in the vicinity of the lines.

I also understand that the lines send all this power to the east coast, again no benefit to Roseau county. This "green" energy seems to take up a lot of space and expense.

I must also admit that "high voltage" transmission lines sound dangerous. There have been many concerns also raised about stray voltage. Shouldn't green energy at least look and sound safer?
