

1990 to 1999

Scan the code to access a series of video shorts
addressing real-life rights scenarios.

The Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) of 1990 made discrimination of individuals with disabilities illegal. This historic passage led to the closing of many institutions for people with developmental disabilities and their placement in community settings. The implementation of assistive technology also was at the forefront in the 1990s as states worked to make all parts of public life more accessible. In 1999, the Olmstead decision, based on the ADA, gave everyone the right to live, learn, and work in the most integrated setting.

Below: Office work. Photos
by Ann Marsden, 1990s.

Left: Technology assisted communication.
Photo by Ann Marsden, 1990s.

Below: Dancing boy. Photo by Ann Marsden, 1997.

Left and below: Integrated education.
Photos by Ann Marsden, 1990s.

