III. COUNCIL PROGRAM

In June, the Bill of Rights Project, a training package of educational materials, and a series of videos about the rights of individuals in Supervised Living Facilities (SLFs) was presented. That Project is part of a campaign to prevent the abuse and neglect of individuals with disabilities.

Today, Carol Russell and Brian Herder are here to give us a preview of the larger prevention of abuse campaign. The Office of the Ombudsman for Mental Health and Developmental Disabilities (OMHDD) issued a Request for Proposal and, through a competitive bidding process, selected Russell Herder to design and develop this campaign.

Russell Herder listened to the stories of people with disabilities, and spent a great deal of time and effort in learning about people’s experiences. The result is co-creation of the campaign with people with disabilities.

Carol Russell began by stating that this has been a journey, a collaborative effort, and work in the community. She presented some background information, the process they used to design the campaign, and the objectives.
The Jensen Settlement Agreement provides the background, a declaration by the State, and a clear direction for this campaign.

The State of Minnesota declares, as a top concern, the safety and quality of life of the Residents of the facility (METO, now called the Minnesota Specialty Health System - Cambridge). The State agrees that its goal is to provide these residents with a safe and humane living environment free from abuse and neglect. The State also agrees to use a Rule 40 Committee and an Olmstead Committee as the means to extend policies to all people with developmental disabilities, not just those individuals who were involved in the lawsuit.

The Jensen Agreement also speaks about an Olmstead Plan, and the need for a comprehensive abuse and neglect prevention plan to educate, report, and prevent the abuse of people with disabilities.

The objectives of this campaign focus on educating key audiences, including individuals with disabilities, and highlighting the individuality and value of all people.

- Nine in-depth interviews with experts in the field were conducted in May and June.
- Twenty-one videotaped interviews were completed.
- Two focus groups with 21 individuals were held in June, including 12 different agencies, advocacy groups, policy specialists, and support service providers.
- Campaigns from other states and around the world were reviewed and analyzed.

They found that abuse and neglect can take many forms –

The ways that we interact with, minimize, and take control over people all contribute to reinforcing the belief that people with disabilities are helpless, and perpetuates their vulnerability.

Abuse and neglect are about people’s relationships.
We are not seeing vulnerable adults as persons.

People with developmental disabilities are among the least powerful.

The main goal of the Prevention of Abuse Campaign is awareness.

Brian Herder said that we are dealing with a lack of awareness and understanding. We can build a platform that challenges the public’s perception of adults with developmental disabilities, and substance abuse and mental health issues.

Prevention starts with education and changing perceptions.

Actively engaging adults with disabilities in all aspects of this campaign has been, overwhelmingly, a positive experience.

Messaging can be presented considering people’s current knowledge and awareness.

- People are valuable and deserve respect
- People are not defined by their condition.
- “Treat people like people.”

Carol Russell and Brian Herder both talked about the campaign launch, what and how this could be done –

- Have materials and statistics available on the website.
- Statewide media outreach; include newspapers.
- Have a lot of video.
- Have posters and brochures available for dissemination.
- Caregivers say this needs to be part of their training.
- An introductory email to launch the campaign and help to spread awareness.
- Direct service providers emphasized social media.
Advocating Change Together, Inc. couldn’t participate in a videotape but self advocates responded to the following – “I wish people would see me as …."

Press releases for distribution to the general public.

How this campaigned happened is a story in itself; the process for designing and creating the campaign should be included

This could be a training video for support staff.

Very quick messaging – six second and 13 second versions.

Outreach will be monitored; evaluation would include reporting on metrics and social engagement. This is a foundation to be built upon.

Opheim noted that the Number One goal is the prevention of abuse and neglect. The OMHDD will need partners to help with roll out and financially support next steps. She added that her office has been very impressed with the work that Russell Herder has done.

Jillian Nelson said “amazing,” adding that we need to consider talking about abuse outside of the service support system. There are other factors and it occurs more than in just formal settings.

McNellis-Kubat said that the campaign was funded by the OMHDD so the focus is on people with developmental disabilities and mental health issues. Whether the campaign will expand beyond that isn’t known at this time. Jillian Nelson cautioned about sending a message that might convey that only people receiving services are vulnerable to abuse.

Opheim said that they will look at this as resources become available. We hope that people will see this as not intended solely about individuals in group homes or institutional settings.

Bartolic noted that this is a bigger issue than a single instance.

Berghorst said she would like a video for staff. We’ve talked about layers of education. If individuals grow up in an abusive environment, they may not recognize these issues for what they really are – not acceptable and not to be tolerated.
In response to Onyeneho’s question about much farther would you want to go with this, Opheim said more videos about individuals, adding links to resources on a website, partnering with someone to focus on families. We had to begin somewhere, and this was our starting point.

Senator Hoffman extended appreciation to Russell Herder for their work on this campaign. This is a foundation and work that can be built upon going forward.

IV. CHAIR’S REPORT

There was no separate Chair’s report for this meeting.
